Reviews and assessments are important and contribute to effectiveness and efficiency....however is this being done in response to mandate and concerns from citizens. Is representation now an issue because it was raised or was it raised so as to become an issue.

With current dwindling population numbers, a few years (at the very least) of uncertain economic landscape, it might not be what is required now.

It is my understanding that with a consensus government, consensus is more important than number in matters of significance.....except in other significance such as voting for the Premier by the MLA's.

What would be the scenarios if one contemplate reducing MLA's in areas we regard as being unfairly over represented? Since increasing might address the imbalance, appropriately decreasing will have the same outcome.

Reduce to balance and have fair representation as oppose to increase to balance.
